CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW

Vol. VII. TORONTO, ONT., JULY 30, 1926 No. 40

Editorial

FATHERS AND SONS

The internecine struggle which has raged in the camp of Toronto Orthodox Jewry for a considerable period has now been finally settled. The committee of New York rabbis has formulated a treaty of peace and the two warring factions have agreed to abide by the findings of the arbitrators. The followers of the Kehilah will be able to partake of the meat vended by butchers who were supervised by the other organization without doing violence to their religious conscience. The members of the insurgent element will be treated as long-lost brothers in the councils of the Kehilah. The erstwhile enemies have, metaphorically speaking, kissed and made up to live happily ever after—until the next ruction.

We are told that during the process of the hearing and the deliberations Toronto Orthodoxy was on the qui vive. Hundreds of people daily gathered at the scene of the trial. Every announcement and rumour was greeted with outbursts of cheering or groans of despair. When the verdict was due and word was passed that there was some delay in the rendering thereof, hundreds of people hung their heads in disappointment. The local Jewish paper is our authority for our information concerning the reaction of the Orthodox Jews to this historic event. Finally when the great moment of the deliverance of the epoch-making document was on hand there was a hush, and then a stirring, and then a rolling thunder of cheering and applause, gradually gaining momentum and volume—a scene similar to that enacted at the foot of Mt. Sinai when the Ten Commandments (with apologies) were handed down. Human feelings of all varieties were given play during the different stages of this drama. Toronto Orthodoxy had worked itself up to a high pitch of excitement and was enjoying its orgy of emotions to the limit.

And while our good brethren were thus emoting, the younger Jews seemed to be in a state of entire indifference towards this whole matter. They were conducting their business affairs, following their professions, playing their golf and pinochle as if the loom of history were not working overtime right in their own midst. The quarrels, the recriminations, the jealousies, the coming and the going of the rabbis—all these in the name of an old and cherished religion—did not concern them. There seemed to be a wide gulf between the two generations, definitely separating them. What was real, cogent to the one was illusory and meaningless to the other. The fathers were groaning or jubilating. The sons heard inarticulate sounds.

There is something pathetic about this lack of sympathy between the two generations. It is not a question of meat-buying, of butchers and rabbis. These older Jews from Russia and Poland are people with a communal spirit. Consider the environment in which they were reared: The small towns in Poland; the Jewish school; the synagogue; the Jewish language; the Jewish modes of thought, the whole background, and the whole atmosphere Jewish. The personalities of these people were nurtured on Jewish experiences and interests, and their very essence is Jewish. Now they have been transplanted here. All their contacts are foreign, chilling, deadening. They recoil from their surroundings. They cluster together, intensifying their Jewish interests. They become introverted, and feed on themselves, on their reserves of Jewishness. Their lives are narrowed, confined; the scheme of their existence becomes twisted, out of plumb. And they seize upon the few concerns that have not been touched by outside influences, and lavish all their stored-up emotionalism on them. They have not made peace with the new world. They attempt to make peace with themselves. They overemphasize the few remaining focal-centres of Jewishness; they distort their radii of relationships. They try to invest their fragments with the fullness of a symmetrical life. And thus it is that they lose sight of proper values and concentrate so heavily on trivial details—the meat question and synagogue politics.

And yet I must confess that these people with their exotic concerns intrigue me more than some of their brethren who have succeeded in assuming a similacrum of Americanism. They have roots. They have a bent, a direction, formed in their early, formative years. Their present life is perhaps meaningless. But they are loyal to their natures. They are stunted, as it were, without branches and foliage. But they have a basis in life. They do not suffer themselves to be bent in different angles from those which they set out to follow. I see many of their brothers, who pride themselves on their capacity for assimilating to new surroundings and I suspect them. They are too flexible. A Jew was who born, say in Shnipishok, and spent his early years in the golus-charged atmosphere of the small Russian town, cannot escape the colouring of his first environment. He may pretend to become a thorough Canadian or American. But at best he will be an incomplete person; a man without a childhood, or young manhood. I have seen the immigrant Jew parade the street in his golf knickers, toting his load of golf sticks. And I felt he was not genuine. He was fooling himself. He is not and never will be a golf player. He can brandish a lulev much better than the mashie. He cannot play the game of the Scotchman for the mere wearing of the knickers. He has frittered away the heritage of his youth. His life is one of spurious content. I should much rather see him play on the strings of his youth—worry about kosher meat and butchers—than try to attune himself to notes that must ever elude him.

And I will make bold to say that in a great many cases the sons who stand aloof from the old-landish interests of their fathers, though of Canadian vintage, are much poorer individuals than their parents. They may have adopted Canadian ways. They may have caught the accent of the street. But they lack the foundation of personality which only a home life can furnish. They were raised in an environment with which they had no sympathy. They grew in a soil from which they could draw no nourishment. Their roots were feeble. Personality grows and develops as it identifies itself and enters into harmony with the outside world. In early life the child contacts the influences in the home. The latter furnish the material out of which the child personality is formed. Now these young men of ours have been raised in the peculiar atmosphere of transition and adaptation which is prevalent in the Jewish homes.

"KIRJATH SEPHER"

The Jewish National and University Library, Jerusalem, has recently issued the first volume of the third year of the bibliographical quarterly review "Kirjath Sepher." The new volume contains a particularly large bibliographical section listing 486 new books on Judaical and Palestinian publications. Of special interest is the list of new books lately published in Russia. In addition the volume contains an essay of Michael Wilenski on the grammatical works of Abraham Ibn Esra, as well as other notes of interest.

The subscription price is sh. 10. "Kirjath Sepher," Meah Shearim, P. O. B. 36, Jerusalem.

ENGAGEMENTS, BIRTHS AND MARRIAGES

MARRIAGES

Isenberg–Yenzeroff

The marriage of Ida Alice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Yevzeroff, to Irving A. Isenberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. Herman, was solemnized Tuesday, July 27, at Annex Hall, Rev. Colton, assisted by Rabbi Vachtfogel, officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a gown of white georgette, trimmed with orange blossoms. Her veil of silk net was arranged in Dutch cap effect with clusters of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses, lilies and lilies-of-the-valley. The maid-of-honour, Miss Bessie Yevzeroff, wore a white satin gown trimmed with lace, and carried a bouquet of tea roses. She wore a headdress of silver leaves. The best man was Joseph Seidler, of Baltimore. The bridesmaids were Misses Leah Yevzeroff, in a gown of white georgette over pink satin slip, trimmed with white tulle and headdress of silver ribbon; Ida Bezumny, in a white satin-faced canton gown and headdress of pearls; Fannie Craft, white georgette trimmed with lace and headdress of rhinestones; Gertrude Sapperstein, of Baltimore, white georgette gown beaded in pearls and rhinestones and headdress of pearls; Gertrude Yevzeroff, white taffeta gown, who carried bouquets of pink roses. The flower girls were Lila Gold, in a ruffled frock of pink georgette, and Mattie Deitcher, in a ruffled frock of maize georgette. They carried baskets of rose petals. The page boy was Eddie Sunshines, who wore a black and white satin suit. The mother of the bride wore an embroidered silver grey satin gown. The groom's mother was in a grey beaded georgette gown. A reception was held for 325 guests. Mr. and Mrs. I. A. Isenberg left for a trip to Boston and Providence, R.I., and will live in Philadelphia. The out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. F. Herman, David Herman, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe Seidler, Aaron Seidler, Miss Gertrude Sapperstein, Joseph Seidler, all of Baltimore; Mr. and Mrs. M. Bilsky, Miss Anne Podolsky and Sam and Louis Drachler, all of Ottawa.

Bellman–Liberman

The marriage of Pauline, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Liberman, to Ben Bellman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gidalea Bellman, was solemnized at the New Beth Jehuda Synagogue, Sunday, July 25, Rabbi Freedhandler officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a gown of white crepe romaine trimmed with lace. Her veil of silk net was arranged in cap effect with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses and lilies. The maid-of-honour, Miss Annie Liberman, in olive green crepe romaine, embroidered in rhinestones, carried a bouquet of pale pink roses. Harry Bellman was his brother's best man. Ushers were Israel Bellman and Harry Vineberg. Frank Altrovitch was in charge of the entertainment. The mother of the bride wore a black satin-faced canton gown trimmed with lace and a corsage of roses. The mother of the groom wore a black crepe satin gown trimmed with crepe romaine and corsage of roses. A reception was held in the synagogue halls for 200 guests. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Bellman left for New York and will live in Montreal.

Congregation Shaare Zion

ROSH HASHONAH this year occurs on Thursday and Friday, September 9-10. It is both a holiday and holy day. It is a season when all of us prepare to meet our God. It is a time when we assemble to renew our covenant with the highest and best ideals in life.

This year, Notre Dame de Grâce Jews have the sacred opportunity to worship in a Synagogue built and supported by them.

SHAARE ZION Synagogue on Claremont Avenue has already won for itself a name in this community.

The Synagogue is a veritable "MIKDOSH ME' AT." The services are inspiring. They appeal to young and old alike.

COME EARLY AND SELECT SEATS FOR YOU AND YOUR FAMILY.

A COMMITTEE WILL BE IN ATTENDANCE EVERY SUNDAY MORNING, beginning with August 1st, and every Wednesday evening eight to ten o'clock.

Your husband needs clean clothes, but he needs you more.

A VOTE FOR THE MOST POPULAR VACATION RESORT

Which is Ontario's most popular vacation resort? If that question were put to a vote, the Kawartha Lakes would rank high among the outstanding favorites.

Here are glorious lakes and beautiful wooded shores. Here are the haunts of the fighting "muskies" and the sport-giving speckled trout. Here the air is always cool and invigorating.

In Kawartha Lakes are hundreds of attractive camping sites, while on various points have been located cottage colonies and well-kept hotels. Everything is here that a vacationist could desire, yet none of the gateways to this land of summer delight are more than three or four hours distant from Toronto via the fast trains of the Canadian National Railways.

For full information, literature, etc., apply to any Canadian National agents.

Louis Wolfe, Conservative Candidate in Coming Dominion Elections in the Cartier Division

Louis Wolfe, who was elected as Conservative candidate by Cartier Division, is president and managing director of the Montreal and St. Lawrence Ports Stevedore Co., Ltd. Born in England forty-five years ago, he came to Canada at the age of twenty and took up a connection with the Robert Reford Co., Shipping Agents, in Montreal. Sixteen years ago he started his present business. Mr. Wolfe is a director of the International Waterway Navigation of Montreal and is very active in many economic questions throughout the Dominion. Although identified with most of the charitable and welfare institutions in Montreal and a board member of many societies, he is a modest man, keeping very much in the background, in the belief that, as one of the rank and file, he can do most good. He is actively interested in anything that tends to the betterment of the members of the community, irrespective of race or creed. Because of his splendid business experience, his opinion and counsel in matters of communal and public welfare is highly regarded. Besides being president of the Montreal and St. Lawrence Ports Stevedore Co. Ltd., and director of the International Waterways Navigation he is also president of Louis Wolfe & Sons, Ltd., of Montreal, Quebec and Vancouver; president of the Kander Paper Stock Co., Ltd., Montreal; and honorary president of the Hebrew Conservative Political Association. As president of Louis Wolfe & Sons, Ltd., he employs over 1,500 men throughout the leading seaports of Canada, nearly one thousand of which are French-Canadians employed in the Montreal harbour. Every seaport in Europe has an intimate knowledge of Louis Wolfe & Sons, Ltd., and of the man who has brought this concern to such prominence in the last fifteen years.

To qualify as a successful stevedore requires not only great executive ability, but capacity for hard work, long hours and the peculiar faculty of handling large bodies of men. Close association with the harbour activities of Montreal has eminently fitted Louis Wolfe for the responsible position he so successfully fills.

Mr. Wolfe, by his efficiency and careful attention to his business, has kept pace with the growth of this port. To-day, out of 350 ships leaving this port with full loads of grain, Louis Wolfe loads 250. In short, nearly 90 per cent. of the grain shipped from the harbour of Montreal passes through his hands.

Too energetic to lay dormant during the winter, when the port of Montreal is closed, Louis Wolfe inaugurated his St. John, N.B., office in 1919. In 1924, the development of Vancouver as a grain port attracted his attention, and he established a branch at that port. It is a signal honour to him for his firm to be known as the largest operator of its kind in Canada.

Louis Wolfe's business affairs involve much travelling from one end of Canada to the other, and to European countries, and the experience he has gained on his trips has caused him to be regarded as an authority on commercial and economic conditions throughout the Dominion.

New Year's Greetings

To Your Friends and Relatives in All Parts of the Dominion through the

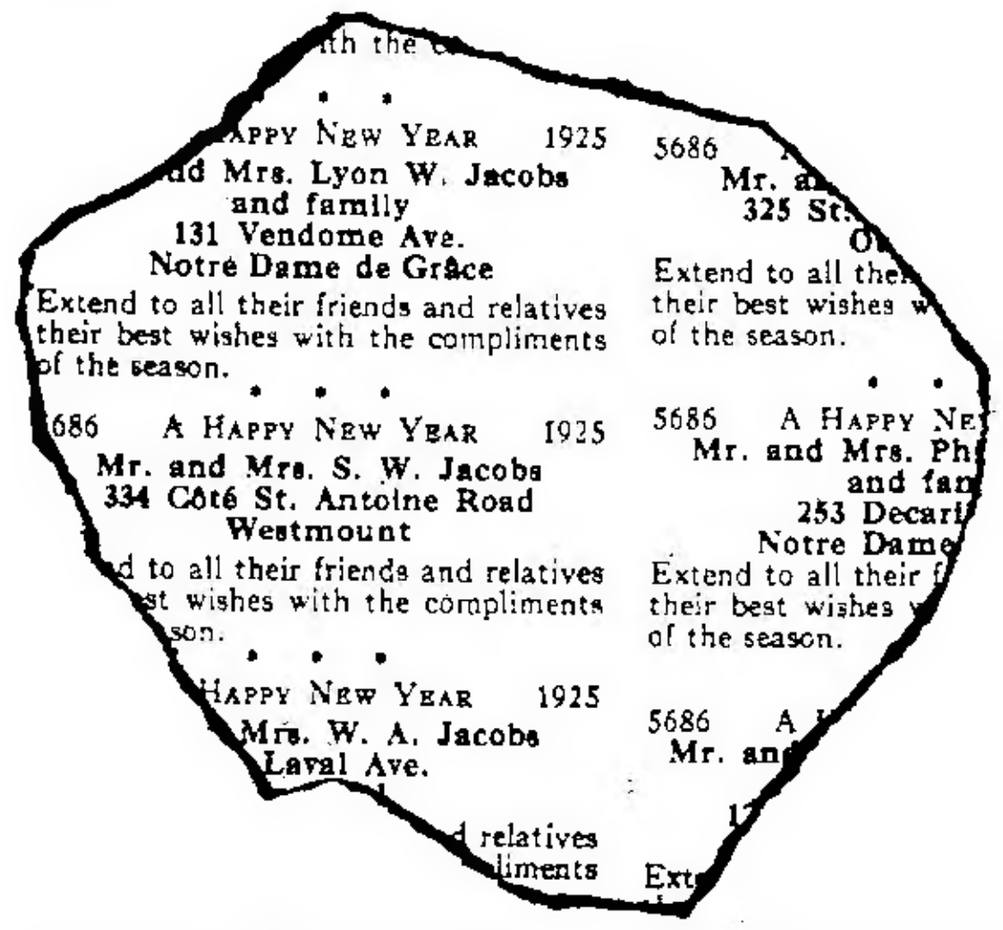
Canadian Jewish Review

THE practice of sending New Year's Greetings to friends and relatives through an Anglo-Jewish paper is general throughout Great Britain and the United States. Its advantage over the old individual mailing card is evident in the saving of time, expense and worry over forgetting a friend.

Greeting Cards in the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW will take this form:



A Happy New Year 1925
Mr. and Mrs. Lyon W. Jacobs and family
131 Vendome Ave.
Notre Dame de Grâce
Extend to all their friends and relatives their best wishes with the compliments of the season.
A Happy New Year 1925

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancour
That for what it cost me to be free
I might have had an anchor."

Felix M. Warburg is an international banker, a Jew who lives in New York and gives away a lot of money, chairman for fourteen years of the American Joint Distribution Committee, honorary chairman of the six-million-dollar United Jewish Campaign in New York, whose gift of $400,000 was the largest individual contribution to the campaign; and he is known by all these things. But in future Warburg may also be known as the man sued for $7,500 by Walter Hyams, head of a newspaper clipping service, for arranging a luncheon in honour of Lord and Lady Mountbatten.

Mr. Hyams claims that $7,500 was the fee never paid but promised for services "in advancing the social ambitions of the defendant" by giving him the opportunity to meet "newspaper executives of international fame, and Lord and Lady Mountbatten, cousins of the Prince of Wales." Hyams says that he was to make it appear that Warburg was an invited guest while the latter was really footing the bills. He says that he was to have Warburg placed next to Lady Mountbatten so that the banker might talk with her "on matters of international finance and establish a connection whereby his banking house (Kuhn, Loeb & Co.) might participate in any business of a financial nature which the British government might see fit to transact in the United States." Hyams also charges that not only did Warburg fail to pay the fee for this bit of social engineering but he also never paid for 154 dollars' worth of roses for Lady Mountbatten and smaller sums for tips, printing, automobile hire and photographs.

Press accounts of the luncheon at the time said that it was given by Capt. Walter Hyams of the American Red Cross, but, sad to relate, Mr. Warburg's name did not appear with those of Dr. Lawrence Abbot, of the Outlook; Ralph Pulitzer, Arthur Bisbane, Dr. Albert Shaw, of the Review of Reviews, and others, although Hyams says he was handling the publicity and Warburg was supposed to be the real prima donna of the whole affair. No matter how the case is decided or whether Hyams ever gets a cent or not, his revenge for something or other has already been sweet: Warburg can deny forever that he got a publicity agent to stage a luncheon so that he could form a contact with nobility in order to advance his own business interests and social prestige. Warburg may deny emphatically, as he has already, but it won't do him much good now. He will always be a little like the poor fellow in De Maupassant's "The Piece of String." He may be right, but no one will ever quite believe him.

The Veritans Club of Portland, Maine, is composed of Jewish business and professional men exclusively and its purpose is "to promote civic enterprise in the community, to emphasize the need of active co-operation among all the citizens of the city, to lay particular stress on what we, as Americans, can do." Veritans has been invited to affiliate with the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and Exchange Clubs, made up for the most part of Gentiles. In commenting on this club, the American Hebrew asks, with charming insistence, "Why the need for segregation?"

The American Hebrew thinks it is all wrong for Jews to go off by themselves and form a club of their own. They should join the established clubs and make the membership mixed. In England, says the paper, Jews mingle freely with the best people, and this is the right attitude. Jews should never segregate themselves except in worship; ghettos are not needed in this country; the Veritans Club should merge with the other clubs of business and professional clubs.

But this is not England. Jews here do not mix freely with the "best" people, social anti-Semitism is firm and, whether ghettos are needed or not, there are ghettos. Nathaniel Zalowitz, writing in the Forward, issue of July 4, says that four-fifths of the Jews living in the United States practically have no social contact with the Gentiles. He says, despite the fact that Jews and Gentiles attend public schools together, read the same papers and books and attend the same theatres, the Jews are kept and keep themselves at arm's length from the Gentiles. Zalowitz shows that in several large cities the Jews inhabit certain sections only and gives this as the true earmark of ghetto life. He says that New York City has a dozen different kinds and styles of ghettos for different kinds of Jews. When the Jews want a district they take it by simply moving in. The Gentiles move out as quickly as they can and the result is a new ghetto. Is this voluntary segregation?

As to social anti-Semitism, Dean Inge, on his visit to America expressed surprise that he met no Jews in the social gatherings to which he was invited. The Prince of Wales, visitor in the home of the Sassoon, must have been surprised at the absence of Jews in the American society which gave parties in his honour. At the wedding of the daughter of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., there were a thousand guests but no Jews. Alexander Lyle-Samuel, former member of the English Parliament for the Liberal Party, and representative of the Panama Corporation, recently expressed surprise that the high social circles in the United States admitted no Jews. In attending social affairs he found the company made up of either only Jews or only non-Jews.

So, despite their money, talents, intermarriages, good looks, disloyalties to Judaism, or even their conversions to Christianity, the Jews generally have been unable to break down the barriers when they have wanted to. The majority of those who might [illegible] be socially fitted, at least, prefer to live and circulate where they are not taken on sufferance and so they have established a little Jewish society running parallel with that of the Gentiles.

The American Hebrew knows all this, but whenever it is distressed by anti-Semitism or anything else calling for strong words, it uses the Christian Science method and pretends there isn't anything unpleasant. With the insouciance of an ostrich, the paper buries its head and smiles contentedly into the sand. It knows that if the Jews were as welcome and comfortable in the Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs as other "fine, upstanding Americans" are or as Jews are in a club of their own kind, there wouldn't be any Veritans Club. And yet the American Hebrew will glibly urge that the Jews are wrong when they segregate themselves; they should mix and merge. Perhaps the Veritans Club is waiting to be asked and that will be a long, long time, but not any longer than it will take the pussyfooting American Hebrew to call a spade a spade.

The Wondering Jew

Jewry has been most unjust to Israel Zangwill; as a result his present status in Jewish life is pathetic. It has been rightly said of Sir Moses Montefiore, that he was the knight-errant of his people; if so, Israel Zangwill may be considered its standard-bearer. I know of few men to whom Zionists should be more grateful. For it was Zangwill who, by giving Theodor Herzl significant recognition and by subordinating himself to a man who approached him hat-in-hand, became together with Nordau and Herzl one of the real founders of the Zionist movement. He has remained its only sincere and logical critic outside its own ranks. It is Zangwill's passionately humanitarian volume, "The Voice of Jerusalem," that leads one, among other things, to set up higher standards for Zionism; much that he says in that book bears a very definite relation to Jabotinsky's greatly misunderstood programme. One may fail to follow Zangwill in all his conclusions; his premises and interpretations are like beacon-lights in a murky fog. He is naturally a lover of the two Israels; he has given his life with rare devotion and intensity to bring out the best in both. Was it not Israel Zangwill who cried out from the depths of his soul a solemn warning lest Mount Zion in labour produce a mouse?

Zangwill, the creative artist, the author of "The Children of the Ghetto" and "Dreamers of the Ghetto," together with many other brilliant works, unlike some Jews, never hesitates to descend from his very real Olympus and spend both energy and talent on behalf of the people he loves so dearly. He has an almost prophetic intellectual and moral honesty; he is a sworn foe to all injustice and unrighteousness, whether it be that of Gentile or Jew. With a pen dedicated to peace he has not only revealed a profound sympathy and pity for the inconceivable agony of the Jew in Eastern Europe; he has more than once, by means of his fearless eloquence, aroused slumbering Jewry — and Christendom which causes all and condones all.

Now he lies sick with scarcely more than mention from the English-Jewish papers on this continent. The passing fancy, new times, new idols . . . This unseemly and undeserved neglect of one of the three or four greatest Jews of this generation is, to say the least, disheartening. For Zangwill has not always been the leader, the protagonist of lost causes. Even so, it is far better to be a leader of lost causes and carve thereby for yourself a lasting niche in the Jewish Hall of Fame than to lead causes which are momentarily a success only to have posterity relegate them into the limbo of oblivion. One thinks especially of a certain group of leaders, ("The Grand Dukes," Zangwill called them in a celebrated address), who, purposely blinded to political considerations, Jewish history or reason, are leading a considerable section of American Jewry wherever the caprice of these leaders dictates.

There is a book I hope will be written: Zangwill's memoirs or autobiography. He has lived a life full of rich associations and notable events and has had a decided hand in determining the direction of present-day Jewish affairs. Aside from its worth as a document and as an addition to that book-shelf of fine English prose which is Zangwill's gift to English literature, aside from all that, his memoirs should close an epoch. If it will never be written, who would not be eager to be amongst the first to assort his papers and on a sad day write his life? But such dark thoughts are not for the present; our hope is that Zangwill will speedily recover from his illness.

PLANS FOR HAIFA HARBOUR DEVELOPMENT

The British Government has appropriated the sum of five million dollars for the purpose of constructing the Haifa harbour. The harbour is to serve as the export outlet for Iraq, and it is intended to lay down subterranean petroleum pipe-lines direct from the wells of Mesopotamia right up to the harbour of Haifa. Large warehouses and factories are expected to grow up around the harbour and a considerable beginning in that direction has already been made.

The Haifa Bay Company, formed about a year ago and working in close contact with the various Zionist institutions, has purchased around Haifa, along the coast between Haifa and Acre, large tracts of land, amounting to about 25,000 acres, a fertile soil most fitted for intensive cultivation. A considerable stretch of land has been set aside for bathing beaches and for laying out as gardens. All pools are being drained and the course of the rivers Kishon and Namein is being diverted with a view of gaining a large extent of land for cultivation. Along the whole coast between Acre and Haifa it is expected to establish a series of Jewish colonies mostly of agricultural nature, as the tract is considered as one of the most healthy and most useful areas in the whole of Palestine.

The first nursery for flower bulbs in Palestine has been established by Arazi Brothers in a spot between the Chassidic colony of Bene Berak and the German colony of Sarona. This is an entirely new industry and the aim of the promoters is to cultivate and propagate rare plants, and especially bulbs, which are found wild in Palestine, and to prepare them for export.

According to an official report issued recently by the British Imperial Economic Committee, ten per cent. of the oranges consumed in Great Britain during 1924 came from Palestine.

ROTHSCHILD PEARLS FOUND

Baroness James de Rothschild recovered her $30,000 rope of pearls on Monday after Paris society had been excited by their supposed theft.

The Baroness visited her modiste several days ago and afterward drove through the Bois de Boulogne to the Woman's Automobile Club, where she was photographed. It was after this that she discovered her pearls were gone and reported their loss.

The police asked the Baroness to give them a proof of her photograph, and when this was done they discovered she was not wearing a necklace at the time it was taken. The Baroness was greatly embarrassed and recalled her visit to the modiste.

A midinette had discovered what she thought to be a string of beads after the Baroness left the shop and had tossed them into a drawer. The pearls remained there twenty-four hours until a detective called to claim them.

Dr. Alberto Salamon, head of the Peruvian Commission which has come to the United States in connection with the Tacna-Arica question, is a Jew.

The Do Re Mi of Death

By WILLIAM EMMETT DEATON

This story won third prise in the Short Story Contest recently, conducted by the Brith Sholom News.

There was a flash of gold as the saxophone dropped, and the most exclusive orchestra in this most exclusive city suddenly blended wood and brass and strings in a smooth introductory run. The verse was played in such a difficult manner that few of the dancers recognized it, but the simple melody of the chorus shone through the rendering. It was a clear-cut little tune of three odd notes followed by a staccato crash, repeated over and over from chord to chord to the final bar. The applause was instantaneous; the orchestra dissolved into individuals and the piano player nodded viciously at the drummer, hoping the others would remember that he had prophesied "Bhang" would be a hit.

A short time before there hadn't been any "Bhang." There had only been a nervous, heart-broken little Jew pacing up and down the brief length of a room, the air of which was still heavy with the perfume of flowers—funeral flowers. From upstairs came an occasional burst of grief from Mamma or one of the girls.

"I tell you honest, Benny," Looey patted the shoulder of his cousin with awkward sympathy, "you've got to relax or you couldn't go to the store tomorrow. Remember—"

"Remember!" Benny's eyes were tragic. "Remember—Oh, Looey—if I could only, now, forget! To think right before my eyes he should of been shot dead. Such a good Poppa. Such a good provider for all of us and never in his whole life hurt anyone."

Looey agree soberly, "Not even Mr. Katz himself had a head better for business. Just to think he went and started out with absolutely nothing except maybe five or ten dollars and ended up with two shops and a good trade at each."

"Oh Looey—" the little Jew's fists were clenched. "May the full curse of our fathers be on his murderer. I should like with my own hands to kill him, but—" he added wistfully, "a fine chance I got to touch him when even the police ain't able to find a clue."

"Don't you worry, they'll get him. Before the week is up, maybe, he'll be behind jail-bars."

Benny suddenly ceased his pacing, dropped in a chair and buried his face in his hands, "If I don't stop remembering I think I will go absolutely crazy. I tell you honest, Looey, it ain't only the way he cursed me, or the way he shot poor Poppa, but also it's the way what everything happened."

"What was this feller's name?"

"Jung La or some such; besides being the owner of the GamGot Cafe, he is also the only impolite Chineseman I ever run up against."

"But you said it was Le Le who grabbed the watch?"

"It was. Listen and get it straight for once! Poppa was showing Le Le the tray of specials and I was standing just outside the front door. Poppa seen Le Le slip a watch in his sleeve and he grabs him and yells for me to get a cop. The words ain't even out of his mouth when I heard the funniest sound—I tell you straight—and—"

"What kind of sound?"

Benny shuddered. "Don't speak of them. Even yet they run through my head like—you know, like sometimes a popular tune catches on. At first I figured they were made by a clarinet or flute maybe, but now I think they were Le Le squealing when Poppa grabbed him."

"But how did Jung La—"

"I'm come to that. When Poppa yelled, I turned to run for a policeman and then this low-lifer Jung La bumps into me and seems giving me something awful. Poppa couldn't see me, and, hearing the cursing, pulls the police alarm. Then I hear those queer sounds again, Jung La pushed me aside, the revolver went 'Bang' and there poor poppa was all blood-soiled and bleeding. Oh, Looey, it was awful!"

Looey hastened to change the subject. "You've got a nifty memory to recollect such sounds after so much excitement and such."

"Recollect it!" Benny jumped to his feet. "Recollect it! Sooner I should forget my own name or something. My gracious, Looey! It runs in my head until—"

Looey lit a ciagrette and walked over to the piano. With one finger he tried to find notes to correspond with the three so impressed on Benny's mind. "How was it again?" he asked.

"Ta tra ta. Ta tra—not tra but tra-that's right. What do you suppose—?"

Looey shook his head and threw the cigarette into the imitation fireplace. He began playing the three notes over and over, striking an occasional bass cord. "My word, what a strange combination," he mused.

"After working at the publishers' all day you should be sick of the look of a piano, seems like."

Looey shrugged his shoulders. "There's no percentage passing up something that maybe should be a hit."

"You think—" Benny was becoming interested. "You think we got something maybe?"

"Know some words that should fit?" Looey pulled an envelope from his pocket and began outlining the melody.

"Let's see. Ta tra ta!—bang!" Benny hummed the notes over, "How about 'I want you—'"

"Naw, listen—I got it! We'll try it just as you remember it. Three queer notes and then the crash 'bang!' See? We'll start it like this—'Night time comes—bang! Don't understand—?'"

Benny waved him down excitedly. "No! No! Bang is too—too what you call it commonplace; we'll make it 'bhang' which is the name of some tropical country or some such. Now, listen, I'm blue for—bhang! Don't give a—hang! All day long—bang! Hear my song—bang! And—'"

An hour later Looey closed the piano. "Right or wrong that's all I'm going to monkey with it. We got something nifty or I shouldn't keep turning them notes over and over in my head. When I go to work to-morrow I'll get one of the boys to arrange it; then, maybe, if I can get Irving to listen to it, he will jump to publish it."

"How much should it net us?"

"You can't never tell. If it's the 'wow' I figure, it should run maybe say—five thousand for each of us. How's that, Benny? Not so bad—eh?"

But Benny's weight of woe was returning. "It ain't like I was kicking, but I should trade the money twice over just to get my hands on that Jung La's throat. Oh, such a dirty egg, shooting poor Poppa down in cold blood that-a-way!"

"Fifty-five miles." The traffic officer shouted to the driver of the speeding limousine, "Slow down and turn into the next cross street."

The driver gave a quick glance at the man on the motorcycle. He managed an even briefer survey of the boulevard which at this time of late afternoon was nearly deserted. Then, with increased speed, he shot diagonally across the wide boulevard, pocketing the motorcycle and forcing it relentlessly toward the curb. There was a cry of fear from the startled officer. The brakes shrieked in a shrill scream. A crash as the machine skidded and struck, followed instantly by the crunch of tires passing over a human body.

If the squat driver had anticipated escaping, his plans were immediately upset. As the big car veered away from the curb there came the explosion of a tire punctured by a spoke from the motorcycle. The limousine was thrown half across the sidewalk to come to a halt less than a foot from the face of a brick building. His face twisted in anger, his lips muttering curses, the driver slipped from the car, threw his heavy goggles into the rear and hastily disappeared down a nearby alley. Already the crowds were gathering and frantic calls being sent in for the police.

Fifteen minutes later a squad of ten men were combing the vicinity with drawn guns, hoping for an opportunity to avenge one of the most popular officers on the force. The search started eagerly, the block was occupied by great warehouses and it seemed impossible that a man could lose himself in such a short time. But minutes sped by and the fear grew that he had escaped.

"You are one hell of a cop!" the sergeant stated harshly.

"Honest, Sarg," the officer who had reported the accident, protested, "he had a good lead on me. When I was down at that corner he was about here. I stopped to signal Mike and when I looked again the dog was clean gone."

"Sure now—" said the sergeant, "that might be a-simplifying matters. For it's clear there's only one place he could have gone—that alley there—and the only way he could have gotten out of the alley is by that warehouse door. In ye go, lads, and cover every inch. The divil take us! If we don't get that rat poor Finn's widow will be a-weepin' this night."

It was gloomy in the big building. The air was heavy with the mingled odors of hay and cased tobacco, sweetened by the breath of countless barrels of apples near the entrance. A hasty inspection of the apples ans the squad continued toward the rear.

Crowded into a barrel, a burlap cover cleverly pulled down to imitate the tops of the other barrels, Jung La grinned mirthlessly as the searchers worked past his hiding place. He rather enjoyed the thrill of the moment. His entire life had been crowded with such thrills, beginning with the murder of his girl-wife in China, his smuggled entrance into the United States, his fierce fight for gold, his participation in countless tong wars. And so he snuggled down and with true Oriental patience awaited the time his enemies would exhaust their energy and depart. He had no doubt as to his fate if he were discovered; he knew the police held many bitter grudges against him, but a sixth sense told him he would be safe as long as he remained in his place of concealment.

The offices of the wholesale concern were on the second story of the building. It was usually a well regulated office but this afternoon the manager suddenly cursed bitterly and decided that immediate steps must be taken to preserve his sanity. Since he had employed Sam Joynes, the duties of an office boy had been reasonably well attended to, but alas! Sam was cursed with a whistle—an endless tireless whistle, which like the famous brook ran on forever.

"Here Sam," the office manager spoke harshly, "take this down to the shipping clerk and tell him I say to keep you down there until it's time to take the mail to the post office."

The prospect was pleasing to Sam and he departed quickly. On the bottom step he stopped in delighted amazement at the sight of ten policemen rummaging through the familiar warehouse.

"Great day! What's the matter?" he asked eagerly.

"Have you seen a Chinaman?" the sergeant demanded.

"Sure." The ten men wheeled on him instantly, "Sure, I saw one on Fourteenth Street just yesterday."

"Kid," the sergeant controlled himself with an effort, "get out of the way and stay out of the way if you want to live. Hear!"

Sam was little subject too bedience, but being somewhat overawed by the very multitude of the officers, backed away and sat down on the bottom step in silence. That is, he was silent for possibly ten seconds but it was a too

Federation Notes

The Federation of Jewish Philanthropies cordially invites friends to visit the Boys' and Girls' Fresh Air Camps. Girls' Camp is at Whitby, and has facilities sufficient to provide this year for ten-day trips to 175 girls. It is about three miles outside of Whitby, within a secluded park area belonging to the city. The Boys' Camp has been moved to a new site, near The Pines, this side of Keswick. Over 400 boys will be provided with a two week's outing.

For July the Federation expended for family relief through the Family Welfare Bureau, $3,150.00. From January 1 to July 31, the Federation expended through the Family Welfare Bureau, for family relief over $25,000.00. This is over $4,000.00 in excess of the budget of $35,000.00, which the board of trustees last fall granted the Family Welfare Bureau. In 1923, for the entire twelve months of the year, the total amount expended by the Federation for family relief work through the Family Welfare Bureau was less than $27,000.00.

The Mount Sinai Hospital has received from the Federation since January 1, $3,000.00, and the Jewish Children's Home, Annette Street, $6,500.00. Even though $8,000.00 has been received from subscriptions during July, the Federation at the end of this month will be in debt to its organizations and the bank to the extent of over $6,000.00.

INTER-FRATERNITY SOFT-BALL LEAGUE

In the Inter-Fraternity Softball League, the U.L.P. Fraternity and the Balfours are tied for first place with the Tuex one game behind. Sigma Alpha Mu team won over Tuex last week. Every game has been close and one run has been the usual margin between the teams. The Sigma Alpha Mu team is handicapped by the absence of eight of their star players. The Upsilon Lambda Phi is the new team in the league with Alex Beder pitcher. Tuesday the Sigma Alpha Mu play the Ulps, and on Thursday the Balfours play the Tuex at Bellwoods Park, facing Gorevale. Games at 7.15.

LODGE PICNIC

Council 537, C.O.C.F., first annual basket picnic, August 2, High Park, area 8, picnic grounds. Committee: M. Johnson, M. Miller, Lou Rosenberg, S. Weiss, L. Shadlesky, J. Rithersporn, Mrs. Helen Shaul, Miss Mollie Weintraub and others.

BOY SCOUTS

The 60th Toronto Troop held a presentation night, July 15. Mr. Wade, district scoutmaster, officiated. Two promotions were made. Patrol leader Nathan Lieberman was promoted to cub instructor and Bert Sommers to patrol leader.

Charles Mitchell, president of the Toronto Council, representing Lord Byng, of Vimy, handed warrants for scoutmaster and assistant scoutmaster to James Montagnus and Joseph Fisher. Both the young men have risen from the ranks and gone through scouting as every boy does. Mr. Montagnus is the first Jewish scout to have accomplished this in Toronto and has been in the movement for nearly nine years being a King's Scout and a wearer of the gold cord. His brother, Henry Montagnus is assistant cub master of the troop.

The 60th, both scouts and cubs, will camp this year from August 1st to 14 at Snake Island, Lake Simcoe. This will be the troop's fifth camp.

T.H.A.A.

The Toronto Hebrew Athletic Association baseball teams Juniors have won their last four starts and are on top of the Junior Spalding League. Joe Rosenberg, pitcher, has an average of one run per game in all his starts. He is well upheld by Harry Stones clever catching. Irving Gold who plays centre field, has hit consecutively in the last eight games. Percy Kramer, Myer Miller, Max Brown, and Joe Tator, Jack Salzberg, Kelly Caplan, Al Klein, Al Maitman, Hy Litowitz, Sammy Alpert and Jack Berman are other players.

The Senior softball team are in the lead of their league. They have won their last five games. Players: Kube Eisner, shortshop; Benny Hoffman, Bill Sniderman and Sam Gold, infield; Moe Dunkleman and Issie Ugar, pitchers; Jack Rubin, catcher; Willie Gold, Benny Goldman and George Altman other players.

PANTAGES

In keeping with the policy of the Pantages Theatre, to spare no effort in obtaining the finest and best for its patrons, the management considers it a singular honour to be able to present an artist so gifted as Cantor Josef Rosenblatt, the prominent concert artist and world's foremost Cantor, in a concert programme of popular and classical numbers in Yiddish, French, English and Italian. Cantor Rosenblatt will be presented in addition to the usual vaudeville and picture programme, starting Monday, August 2, to Saturday, August 7, at no advance in prices. He will not appear during the period of the Jewish Sabbath. On the screen will be offered "The Cat's Pajamas," a comedy drama of New York society life, featuring Betty Bronson, Ricardo Cortez, and Theodore Roberts.

WHERE HAY FEVER IS UNKNOWN AND HEALTH REIGNS SUPREME

In Timagami nature has outdone science in conquering Hay Fever. Any vacationist who knows this glorious summerland of evergreen hills and sky blue waters will tell you that in Timagami there is perfect immunity from Hay Fever.

Timagami is more than 1,000 feet above sea level. Latitude and altitude unite in giving a clear, dry rarified atmosphere with warm days and cool nights. It is easy to get to but hard to come away from, for where is there a fisherman who would willingly leave lakes than teem with gamey fish? Or who could but regret leaving such splendid summer accommodations as Timagami offers with its hotels, cottages, cabins, tents; its fine sandy bathing beaches and joyous days of swimming, boating, hiking, dancing? Truly this is the summer home of health and happiness.

When they reached the age of independence they made every effort to orient themselves in the new surroundings. They severed themselves almost entirely from their home environment. So here we have them—young men without a childhood; personalities without roots; a present without a past; a projection without a background.

Fathers without children, children without parents. This is the situation. The fathers tragically revert to their childhood and try to drag out of its recesses interests to engage their adult attention. The sons flee from their childhood, seeking new regions where their old associations will not count. The chain of progression has snapped. The fathers and children are not mutually complementary. When I look at the former and see the pathetic swaying of their heads and brandishing of their arms, I think of the latter beings without foundations.

SHEHITAH PROHIBITED IN BAVARIA

The bill to prohibit the Jewish mode of slaughtering animals was finally passed by the Bavarian Parliament, at the instigation of the Bavarian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The bill was supported by the anti-Semitic group and also by the Social-Democrats. The only hope left to the Jews is that the central government in Berlin might veto this bill. The matter has been brewing for some time and, the Jews of Bavaria hoped that the affair would be dropped after a report of a special commission appointed for that purpose and presented last March recommended that Shehitah should not be prohibited, but should be limited in proportion to the Jewish population of Bavaria. The present action of Parliament was rather unexpected and the Jews are especially indignant at the fact that the Social-Democrats joined the reactionary groups in voting for this measure.

Laurentian Fresh Air Camp

The Laurentian Fresh Air Camp now has several hundred dollars in its treasury to pay for the thirty-odd families who are enjoying a fortnight's rest. But—the mercury is creeping higher and higher: and as the days grow hotter, there are more and more poor tired mothers, some with babes in arms, overcome by the hopelessness that comes with oppressive heat, burning pavements, sweltering, smelly rooms and perhaps stale or insufficient food. To these mothers and to these babes a week or two or clean country air, of fresh food and of restful calm means a new lease on life. What will you do to help them? Send your contributions at once to: Mrs. P. Glickman, 328 Redfern Avenue, West 2132; or to Lena Ashkaloney, CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW, 288 St. James Street, Main 4079, 2285, 8341 or 6344. All donations will be acknowledged in the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW. A series of entertainments is being arranged in aid of this fund. What can you do to assist? The conveners want your money, your time, or the loan of your car for a few hours. Communicate with them at once.

A bridge and mah jongg will be held at the Trout Lake Hotel, Trout Lake, Ste. Agathe, on Tuesday afternoon, August 10, in aid of the Laurentian Fresh Air Camp, with Mesdames S. Kalman, B. Balinsky, H. L. Sourkes and A. Dainow as conveners. A dance will be held in aid of the Laurentian Fresh Air Camp at the Hotel Vermont, Ste. Agathe, on Saturday, August 14, with the Len Howard Orchestra in attendance. Guests from neighbouring hotels or summer resorts are invited. Help make these affairs a success.

Additional donations for the Laurentian Fresh Air Camp are: Miss Fanny Cooper, $1; Miss Anne Rabinovitch, $1; Miss Lucille Reston, $1; Miss Frances Levikoff, $1; Mrs. I Tarshis, 322 De l'Epee Avenue, $2; Mrs. M. A. Fine, 5602 Park Avenue, $1; Mrs. J. Usher, 5071 Sherbrooke West, $1; Mrs. Greenspon, 735 Querbes Avenue, $1; Mrs. Bessner, 76 Bernard Avenue, $1; Mrs. I. The Do Re Mi of Death unnatural condition for the young man. Afraid to start further conversation, his lips puckered and he picked up the thread of whistle that he had dropped on seeing the policemen.

As the searchers moved away, Jung La weighed the advisability of slipping from his barrel, but ever his intuition warned him that until the entire party left the neighbourhood his safety lay in concealment. He wished fearful curses on the traffic officer who had frustrated his well considered plans to leave the city. Suddenly he sat erect, with a queer feeling that his ears had played him false. He listened intently, even held his breath to hear the better. He shook his head, forcing himself to see the whole thing was impossible, and yet . . . . . .

Fear and memory clashed. Gross selfishness and unholy loyalty were in conflict. He dug long curved nails into moistened palms and fought back a flood of fatalistic fears. He weighed decisions of life and death and forgot the recklessness of past years. Ever before he had responded before the echoes died away; now he crouched back in his darkness terrified. It seemed impossible and yet it continued; strange and distorted, repeated constantly and differently, and yet genuine and real and carrying the memory of dripping caverns, of low whispered oaths, of sinister brotherhood, bonded in blood. Sweat was running into his slanting eyes. He clasped writhing hands over his ears to keep out the damning sounds. He offered silent prayers to strange gods as he twisted and coiled and unwound, a great snake trying to escape the music of the charmer. It could not last. The weight of too many centuries, the curses of too many ancestors fell upon him and with a shriek he sprang from his place of concealment. Down the narrow aisle he plunged, down toward the startled officers and the death that crashed simultaneously from three revolvers. Overhead the rafters mocked his cry even as he crumpled.

Sam Joynes was a youth little loving silence, but events too stupendous for his eyes had transpired. His whistle died away and he sat frozen, his stomach weak from the sight of warm, fresh blood. Death lay before him, so much he knew, but destined never to know that his lips had summoned the man to his doom. And why should he question? For he had been merely whistling "Bhang," a popular song—a queer little song based and written around three queer little notes—notes that were queer indeed—the very notes that form the help-cry of the Oolo Tong—the mightiest call for help in all the world.
